Turning briefly to legal issues of a different kind...When a couple gets divorced in Britain, the process of reaching a financial settlement can be complicated. In general, how do you think couples should divide any savings and property they acquired DURING THEIR MARRIAGE...

Turning to the issue of education...While a number of people tend to agree about the general importance of education to society, they often disagree about which individual subjects are the most important to study in this day and age. How important do you think it is for ALL British schoolchildren to study the following subjects at some stage?

Still on the environment...Britain's publicly owned forests and woodlands are currently managed by a national government department. Thinking about the different types of benefits that forests provide and the different ways to manage them, which of the following statements best reflects your view? Britain's forests would be most effectively managed by...
