Under the traffic light system, people travelling between the UK and a 'green' country will be required to have a negative coronavirus test result before travelling back to the UK and on arrival at a UK airport. With these restrictions, do you think it is or is not worth going on holiday to a 'green' country?

Under the traffic light system, people travelling between the UK and an 'amber' country will have to:
-have a negative test result before travelling back to the UK
-have a negative test result on arrival at a UK airport
-self-isolate at home for 10 days (or they can choose to pay for an additional test after 5 days, and end their quarantine if it is negative)

With these restrictions, do you think it is or is not worth going on holiday to an 'amber' country?
