Lord Rennard has been suspended from the Liberal Democrat party after allegations he behaved improperly towards a number of women when he was chief executive of the Liberal Democrats some years ago.

An investigation into Lord Rennard's behaviour found the accusations were "broadly credible", but that they could not be proved beyond doubt so Lord Rennard would not be disciplined. Alistair Webster QC, who led the inquiry, recommended that Lord Rennard apologise.

Lord Rennard says he is innocent of the accusations and cannot apologise for something he did not do. As a result he has been suspended from the party
