Currently people who have received prison sentences of over 30 months for sexual offences are placed on the sex offenders register for life, with no way of having their name removed. The Supreme Court has ruled that there should be a way of them applying to have their name removed from the list if they are no longer a danger. Other people think they pose such a threat that their names should remain on the register for life.

Which of the following best reflects your view?

People placed on the sex offenders register for life should be able to apply to the police to have their name removed if they can show they are no longer a danger to the public	20	18	22	36	16	22	29	26	14	19	19	22	20	24	15	25	20	15	20	27
People who have committed crimes serious enough to be placed on the sex offenders register for life will always pose a risk and should remain there for life	69	75	69	50	78	68	59	62	77	66	67	68	75	65	76	61	69	76	71	64
